Documenting Bowdoin & COVID-19

In response to the COVID pandemic, Special Collections & Archives is documenting Bowdoin's response during this unprecedented historical moment. Meagan Doyle, the Library's Digital Archivist, is preserving the College's official messages around COVID by archiving emails and websites, while also working with members of the broader community to capture personal experiences through the Documenting Bowdoin & COVID-19 initiative. Bowdoin students, alumni, faculty, and staff are encouraged to reflect on their experiences during the pandemic, in any form, and consider contributing their stories to the Archives. Explore the stories and consider submitting your own.

Noteworthy Additions to the Library's Collections

Thanks to continued support from generous donors, the collections of the Library's George J. Mitchell Department of Special Collections & Archives have expanded in important ways over the past several months. Of particular note is a major acquisition of an early American medical book collection, the library of Dr. John Hubbard, Maine governor and father of Thomas Hubbard, for whom Hubbard Hall is named. A gift of the Hubbard Free Library, the collection of more than 260 volumes affords researchers a window into the life and work of a 19th-century physician operating a solo practice in the bustling riverside town of Hallowell.

The Library's new digital collections include the San Francisco Chronicle Historical Archive (1869-1984), which fills a major gap for historical west-coast primary sources, and the JSTOR Lives of Literature collection (integrated into JSTOR), which includes 100 journals devoted to the deep study of writers and texts associated with core literary movements, from medieval authors and texts to literary theorists. Music researchers will appreciate the move from print to electronic access for RRIMO, Recent Researches in Music Online, and we have purchased the digital edition of the fifty-volume The Works of St. Augustine. The library is also supporting a paid one-year trial through December to Sources Chrétiennes Online, a collection of patristic writings which includes the original text (usually Greek or Latin, though at times Syriac, Arabic, or Georgian), accompanied by a French translation, notes, and an introduction that situates the work in its historical and doctrinal contexts.

Digital Exhibits

Special Collections & Archives' exhibit program highlights and contextualizes unique materials from the collections to explore themes such as College history, science, and book arts. In a shift to supporting remote access, several new digital exhibits complement a range of previously available online content. To commemorate the 2020 Bowdoin Reunion, six exhibits explore and celebrate the Classes of 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980, and 1985 through photographs and archival documents. And for those missing the monthly Audubon page-turnings, there is a rich site dedicated to Bowdoin's copy of the double-elephant folio Birds of America that examines the provenance and importance of this book, and includes a full archive of past page-turning speakers and links to video livestreams.

Staff Transitions

The Library will soon bid farewell to Joan Campbell and Anne Haas, both of whom will retire this summer.

Joan Campbell came to Bowdoin in October 2006 to serve as Collections Librarian. In that role, her work has centered on building and managing the Library's collections, but that tells only part of the story. She has led and actively participated in myriad Library projects including web design, scholarly communication, and most recently, planning for the Library Annex. She founded Bowdoin Reads in 2008, provided support to students and faculty as liaison for the English and Philosophy Departments, and served on a variety of College committees. Over the course of her tenure, Joan has planned and facilitated uncountable collections moves, expertly navigated changes in publication formats and licensing schemes, worked tirelessly with our Bates and Colby colleagues to develop collaborative projects, and gained a reputation as a shrewd negotiator with the publishers and vendors who supply our materials. Joan is laser focused on the needs of students and faculty—a focus that has been at the forefront of all of her work and benefits the entire campus community. Her insight and acuity are visible in much of what we do as a Library, notably among the collections to which she has been extraordinarily committed over the past fourteen years. And it is the Library collections, as they have matured over the course of a decade, that will serve as a lasting tribute to Joan, her principled work, dedication, and collegiality.

Anne Haas will leave Bowdoin after serving for 34 years as Art Librarian. Throughout her tenure, Anne has been a staunch advocate for the Art Library and the faculty and students she serves. She has painstakingly developed the Library's collections, shepherding them into the digital age, and has creatively conquered the challenges of working within the confines of the Art Library's limited space in the Visual Arts Center. She is devoted to her students—those who work as student employees and the art students she supports in her liaison role—serving as a mentor to many. Over the years she has contributed to and participated in a multitude of Library-wide initiatives, including, most recently, overseeing the Ramp Gallery, the student gallery space in Hawthorne-Longfellow Library. Anne will be missed as both an essential presence in the Visual Arts Center and as a treasured member of our staff community.
